A CELEBRATION OF DIVERSITY

This issue of Hesston College Today celebrates the contributions of those who have come to Hesston College from a variety of cultural backgrounds. This diversity, which we celebrated during Homecoming in September, is part of our history and has become even more prominent in recent years. Our current student population includes students from 12 countries outside of the United States, representing 11 percent of our total students. In recent years, our student population has included 30 to 35 percent students of color. There is growing diversity in terms of our religious backgrounds as well, with 25 faith traditions represented on campus. Ten years ago, more than 50 percent of our students were Mennonite, and that group is now just under 35 percent. We also have students at various life stages and in different professional programs. It all adds up to a wonderful campus community.

My favorite room on campus is the Dining Hall, surrounded by the flags of all countries represented by our students. It is common to see students from three or four continents and hear conversations in different languages. I do not have comparative data to back this claim, but Hesston may be the most diverse of all private colleges in Kansas.

In the last three years, we have been engaged in an inclusion and diversity initiative, with the overall goal of becoming a more welcoming community. A council led by Tony Brown ’69, internal consultant for inclusion, Marelby Mosquera ’04, faculty member, and Rachel Swartzendruber ’00 Miller, vice president of Admissions, develops specific goals and plans to help us become more like the inclusive community envisioned in the New Testament.

This is important work. One cannot adequately learn from other cultures by reading, listening and watching. We learn from each other by being with each other and working and playing together. We hear each other’s stories and learn to let go of stereotypes and privileges that come with color of skin, family names and places of birth.

Part of our mission statement reads “educates and nurtures each student in Christ-centered community.” The growing richness of our student population and our efforts to learn from each other helps us come closer to realizing this ideal.

COMMUNICATION FOR A GLOBAL IMPACT

MARATHANA PROTHRO & DAVE OSBORNE AC64, ’66
It only takes one conversation with Sadi Othman ’93 to recognize the secret to his success. He’s intelligent, diplomatic and charming with just the right blend of confidence and humility.
It only takes one conversation with Sadi Othman ‘93 to recognize the secret to his success. He’s intelligent, diplomatic and charming with just the right blend of confidence and humility.

Othman, now a vice president of the investment firm North America Western Asia Holdings (NAWAH), doesn’t recall ever having a problem building relationships. He credits his Hesston Experience — especially classes with Jim Mininger Ac61, Phil Osborne Ac61, ’63 and Howard Keim ’72 — as playing a role in developing communication and peacemaking skills that have served him well as he has sought to help bridge the gap between the United States and Iraq.

“My classes at Hesston helped me learn how important communication is,” said Othman following his keynote presentation at Homecoming in September. “I learned to just keep talking with — not shout at — each other. If you disagree, you can still respect others. It takes courage to express yourself in a manner where you try not to hurt the intelligence, feelings or point of view of the person with whom you disagree.”

A Palestinian-American, Othman was hired by the U.S. government in 2003 as a cultural and political advisor to U.S. Army Brigadier General Frank Helmick, then second-in-command of the 101st Airborne Division. The primary task was to help rebuild the infrastructure in northern Iraq. Within a short time, Othman was asked to assist General David Petraeus, then a major general in the 101st, as a linguist and advisor.

As Petraeus’ role and rank elevated over the next several years, so also Othman’s role and responsibilities grew as he developed friendships with political leaders from across the Iraqi political spectrum. Othman’s role in Iraq from 2003 to 2008 evolved into a pivotal communication link between the U.S. political/military leadership and Iraqi political leadership.

“The most valuable instrument in [Petraeus’] effort to influence [Iraqi leaders] was his advisor Sadi Othman,” said author Linda Robinson in her book Tell Me How This Ends: General David Petraeus and the Search for a Way Out of Iraq (Public Affairs, 2009).

Othman’s return to the U.S. in 2010 seemed to provide him an opportunity to start a career in the global business world. His plans were put on hold when the U.S. administration asked him to return to Baghdad for a short-term focused effort to assist the Iraqis in forming a new government following the March 2010 elections.

Following the short-term assignment in Baghdad, Othman joined the business world when he was named vice president of NAWAH, established in 2011 by Hyatt Hotels executive chairman Thomas Pritzker and former Pentagon official Paul Brinkley. NAWAH has initiated investment projects in the Middle East, North Africa and Asia. It was one of the first American companies to make a multi-million dollar capital investment in re-emergent Iraq.

Othman recently put his business career on another temporary hold when he returned to Iraq at the request of the U.S. administration to work as a communication link between Iraqi political leaders and U.S. leaders. He was tasked with helping in the formation of a new Iraqi political leadership team, with more inclusion than was the case with the previous Iraqi political and military leadership structure.

The Iraqi parliament approved newly appointed Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi’s new government in September, and Othman has since returned to his business career at NAWAH.

Othman’s start at Hesston was as unique as his go everywhere experience. He grew up in Jordan, and was in the sixth grade studying at the Mennonite school in Beit Jala, near Bethlehem, when he first learned about Hesston College. Dave Osborne ‘64, ’66 was teaching in the school in his first of what would become 10 years working as a volunteer with Mennonite Central Committee in the Middle East. The teacher-student relationship developed into a deep friendship. Othman recalls wondering, “Maybe I can go to the same school Dave went to.”

After emigrating to the United States, Othman became a citizen in 1977, and started his studies at Hesston as an adult in his 30s. He remembers the campus being empty and hot on his first visit late in the summer of 1991. He immediately wondered whether he would fit in.

He found a place among his classmates, especially Pastoral Ministries students, and is grateful for the ways in which faculty and staff helped guide him. Othman was, in particular, influenced by the Hesston College community’s emphasis on relationships and connecting with others.

“Relationships matter a lot in life, including in your professional life as well as political life,” said Othman. “Circumstances sometimes lead you to places you never expected to go, and that’s where good communication and relationships will always benefit you.”

Sadi Othman ‘93 discusses his work as a cultural bridge between the U.S. and Iraq during his keynote presentation at Homecoming in September.
It's not uncommon for some students to experience culture shock when they arrive on the Hesston College campus. Usually they are international students and occasionally students new to the Mennonite culture, not American Mennonites like Lisa Guedea ‘81 Carreño (Goshen, Ind.).

Carreño chose to start at Hesston because she wanted to explore the Mennonite part of her heritage—a part with which she wasn’t too familiar. She says her Hesston Experience gave her what she was looking for: it served as a step in her journey to embrace her identity and provided a start in an unexpected career.

Carreño was born in Chicago to a Mexican Catholic father who had converted to the Mennonite faith and a white American Mennonite mother. She spent her childhood in inner-city Denver’s Mexican-American ghetto and then in south Texas, just 150 miles north of the Mexican border where her father was the pastor of a “fledgling church made up of equal parts jerked-over Catholics and leftover [Mennonite] Voluntary Service workers.” Discovering and accepting her identity was a difficult process for Carreño because of her mixed heritage, which she calls a “mixture of two mixtures.”

“I am the Mexican mixture that is Spanish and Indian, and the ethnic Mennonite mixture that is made up of Swiss immigrants who intermarried with German immi grants,” said Carreño.

Carreño arrived at Hesston College grappling with how to view her identity. As a child growing up in Texas, she experienced cultural criticism from other children. She describes her years in Texas through two very defining life experiences. The first was her identity as a minority, and the second was being on the receiving end of racism. She found it difficult being on the outside, a product of a bicultural marriage, especially in a region where cultural differences were not embraced.

For Carreño, Hesston College was “kind of like the first euphoric phases of culture shock.”

“Coming to Hesston was kind of an anthropological experiment for me because it was all so different from how I grew up,” Carreño said. “I didn’t understand the unspoken rules for how people did things.”

While her Hesston Experience did not provide the moment of clarity in coming to terms with her identity, it was a crucial step in her journey of self-discovery and self-awareness, she says. It provided an opportunity for her to interact and share in new ways that broadened her worldview.

To add to the pile of new experiences, Carreño, who planned to study music education, was assigned to a work study job in the library. Although it wasn’t her first choice to pay her way through college, it proved to be a “right place, right time” situation just a few years later.

Her job in the Mary Miller Library led to a work study position in the Goshen (Ind.) College library when she transferred. It was there, shortly after earning her undergraduate degree in music performance, that a colleague approached her with the idea of pursuing a master’s in library science.

Carreño earned her master’s degree from Simmons College (Boston) a few years later and has worked in a variety of librarian roles in corporate, academic and public sectors since. She is now the director of Elkhart (Ind.) Public Libraries and previously served for 14 years as library director at Goshen College.

Finding and accepting her identity—in both the sense of her heritage and career—wasn’t without feelings of inadequacy, isolation and confusion. However, Carreño is now proud of her multicultural roots and professional accomplishments and ready to explore whatever new opportunities come her way.

“We’re all part of this huge mosaic that has many differences and that’s fine,” said Carreño. “I don’t have it all figured out; I have not ‘arrived.’ I’m still learning and stumbling as we all are.”
“I say hey, wave to the world, this is my day…this is my time, I’m going to shine.”

For singer/songwriter Aaron Young ’12, the lyrics from his first single, “Say Hey,” become more applicable every day. Since graduating from Hesston and returning to his hometown of Kansas City, Mo., Young has brushed elbows with some of the biggest names in music and made great strides on his journey of making it in the music world.

In a little more than two years, Young, known by his stage name AY MusiK, has competed as a contestant on FOX’s The X Factor, opened for performers including T-Pain and Aaron Carter, released one album, Above and Beyond EP, with a second, FareWell, slated to be released January 1 and performed on more than 100 college campuses with his innovative power system as part of his #BatteryTour. In November, he appeared on MTV's reality show MADE as a premiere concert band in the “It Girl” episode.

In short, Young is achieving something he has always dreamed of – reaching people with his message of “be true to who you are.”

“The biggest journey I’ve had has been accepting my own music,” said Young. “I didn’t have the courage or complete confidence to do that for a long time. I thought people wouldn’t like me because I’m a rapper. Once I started being genuine to who I am, I saw people respond in a great way. I think I’m onto something good.”

In a industry that reflects ever-changing trends and pressure to conform to popular standards, Young refuses to compromise himself and his message just to make it big. His songs resound with positive messages of “be you,” “believe in yourself” and “never give up.”

So far, his high-energy personality and imaginative techniques have been enough to get him noticed.

Young’s success hasn’t come by chance, but by acting on opportunities, taking risks and careful networking, he says. For his most recent endeavor, the #BatteryTour, Young incorporated two pre-existing technologies into one that doesn’t require electricity, allowing him to perform live anywhere and at any time. Many of his connections stemmed from being discovered while performing on street corners and in parks.

As he rises in the ranks of the music world, Young credits his years at Hesston as the most important in his musical growth.

Young had only just begun exploring his musical talents when he transferred to Hesston from the University of Missouri-Kansas City in the fall of 2010. He was recruited as a member of the men’s basketball team, but with a desire to launch a music career, he also found time to be a part of the Hesston College Chorale, take private voice lessons with Matthew Schloneger ’92 and create new music.

“Hesston was the single most significant move in my career to date,” said Young. “It’s there that I grew as a writer and musician. My Hesston Experience gave me material that shaped my music. Some embraced it, others didn’t, but it helped prepare me for the realities of the music industry. People can do whatever they set their minds to. I hope I’m living proof of that.”

Young’s music and videos can be found as AY MusiK on YouTube and wherever digital music is sold.
MUSIC AND PEACE
My interests in music and peace began as a child. I was born in Colombia where there has been armed conflict for more than 50 years. My parents are missionaries, so I often helped in their efforts that help create peace. My father taught me traditional instruments like the bomba, and I played music at church.

When I started at Hesston, I was disoriented about what I wanted to do. I first studied pre-architecture, but switched to sociology. At Hesston I discovered my passion for thinking about peace and justice in an academic setting. After graduating, I transferred to Goshen (Ind.) College where I majored in peace, justice and conflict studies and minored in music. I worked with mental health for immigrants for a year, as I believe health and education are important pillars of peacebuilding and the foundation for a peaceful society. I also worked as a guitar instructor. I received a master’s degree in international peace studies with an emphasis in policy and political change from the University of Notre Dame (Ind.). For part of my degree work, I spent eight months in Israel and Palestine working with a journalist and discovering stories of peace and hope in the midst of violence.

Music has been present throughout all my endeavors. At Hesston I had a band and was able to share my original music and culture with students and the community. I also studied classical guitar, music theory and took voice lessons. I have played at peace festivals and rallies for undocumented immigrants. I believe carrying a message through music is my mission as a musician and allows me to facilitate awareness about issues. Many of my original songs carry messages of environmental issues, love for humanity and creation and are inspired by my experiences in Colombia, Ecuador and the Middle East.

MUSIC AS VOCATION
My band, La República Rock Latino, formed in 2011 with my brother Juan and a percussionist who comes from the same region of Colombia. We toured throughout the United States then moved to Mexico City in July 2014, which is a cultural hub for Latino arts and music. We are now working with a manager, have opened for a famous Latin rock band and are trying to get our original music out to the masses.

A MULTICULTURAL EXPERIENCE
Hesston is a special place because it brings the world to you with students coming from so many places and cultures and sharing their stories. That kind of exchange has transforming power. It encouraged me to be an agent for social change. It’s easy to be in an academic institution and be trained to be a professional and make money. A multicultural experience places value not on making money but growing as a member of a global community.

CHOOSING HESSTON
I attended high school at Lezhë Academic Center, a school financed by Virginia Mennonite Missions with both Albanian teachers and American volunteer teachers. One of my teachers, Lisa Mast ’02, told me about Hesston. I wanted to come to the United States for college because I wanted a better education than I would have received in Albania. I chose Hesston because it is a small Christian school with a warm community, and from what I had heard, they help international students succeed by being available in all areas of the student experience.

A HOME AWAY FROM HOME
I have felt very welcome at Hesston from the first day I was on campus – especially when a faculty member gave me flowers. Everyone here is so welcoming and caring and it is the Christian environment that I was very eager to be a part of. Campus Worship, hymn sings and gathering together to have a good time are things that I really value about Hesston. People say hello when you meet them in passing, which is very different than where I come from.

CHANGE AND EXPLORATION
At first, I was afraid of the things I didn’t know about. I was nervous about the language and communicating with others, since English is not my first language. It hasn’t been a big problem, but I have had a few incidents when I’ve felt uncomfortable in the conversation. I am the only student from Albania so I’ve had to figure out the differences myself and I haven’t been able to just become complacent in only talking to others who speak Albanian, which has helped me improve my language skills.
When Hesston College women’s soccer coach Bryan Kehr recruited midfielder Chihiro Hikita ’13 (Hokuto, Japan), he correctly assumed he’d added an unmistakable talent and instant scoring threat. Hikita didn’t disappoint in the fall of 2011, leading Hesston to a then program-best seven wins. What Kehr didn’t realize is that Hikita was the first of many Japanese players who would make an impact for the Larks.

A year after Hikita led the Larks in goals, Kehr added Myu Kobayashi ’14 (Yokosuka, Japan) and Yoshie Ueno ’14 (Tokyo, Japan) to the 2012 roster. Kobayashi exploded onto the college soccer scene in her debut, recording a hat-trick in a season-opening Hesston win. Ueno, meanwhile, was becoming a positive leader and role model on the team – a role that Kehr describes as very significant.

Kobayashi, Hesston College’s all-time assist leader and team captain her sophomore year, ranks fifth in career goals. Hikita is tied for eighth in that same category, while current freshman Machi Kanematsu ’16 (Osaka, Japan) was the Larks’ leading scorer this season and has already cracked the career goals top 10.

Looking back, the four players’ time with the Hesston program has made an impact on much more than just the stat sheet. Indeed, Hikita, Ueno, Kobayashi and Kanematsu have shared their culture and friendship, along with their athletic talents, with their teammates.

Following her first semester, teammate Jessica Donnelly ’14 hosted Ueno for several weeks at her Gresham, Ore., home, just as she had done for Kobayashi the year before. Now an Oregon State University (Corvallis) student, Ueno’s time on the Hesston soccer team enriched her college experience.

“Playing soccer gave me so many great memories,” Ueno said. “I didn’t have many American friends before I joined the team, but my teammates quickly became like family to me. The relationships I built on the team enhanced my college life a great deal.”

Japanese students have a long and significant international student presence at Hesston, and the recent women’s soccer players from Japan have added to the rich Hesston history of diversity and multiculturalism. Studying in another culture while playing soccer, the Japanese students managed to do some teaching, too.

As part of Kehr’s prescribed monthly team social activity, Ueno and Kobayashi hosted a sushi meal their freshman year. About half the team participated, Kehr remembers, with the other half being a little unsure of Japanese cuisine. A year later, Kehr recalls clean plates and a new-found appreciation for new experiences. This year’s sushi meal has been scheduled for February.

“Coach Kehr taught me so many things through soccer practice and games,” Ueno said. “He gave me a chance to join the team and for that I am grateful. As an international student, playing soccer allowed me to meet many amazing people. Words can’t explain how much I love my former teammates.”

“Through counting in Japanese instead of English, having a Japanese word of the day and learning to make sushi as a team, we’ve all enjoyed having international students on our team,” said Elisabeth Wilder ’15 (Hesston). “It’s been a great way to build relationships across cultural lines.”

“I didn’t have many American friends before I joined the team, but my teammates quickly became like family to me. The relationships I built on the team enhanced my college life a great deal.”

— Yoshie Ueno ’14 —

Machi Kanematsu ’16 (Osaka, Japan) scores on a penalty kick. Kanematsu was the Larks’ leading scorer this season.
Get any group of Hesston alumni together, and you’ll get to hear stories – trips to Druber’s and Newell’s, mod activities, pranks played and more. Just recently, a friend of mine who didn’t attend Hesston remarked that he’s never met a Hesston alumnus who wasn’t passionate about the school and their experience there. It seems to be a fundamental truth that Hesston College has a positive impact on the people who attend there.

As a fundraiser, I get to see every day the way that people’s money gets turned into stories and experiences. In the same way, my donation to Hesston College gives new generations of students the chance to learn the Heils, participate in the Talent Show and shape their future as graduates of Hesston College. The reason that I give to Hesston College is that I know that the stories of Hesston College are ones that I want people to keep telling long into the future.

CAMPUS NEWS BRIEFS

ENROLLMENT SEES INCREASE IN NEW STUDENTS

Official fall enrollment numbers show a marked increase in new students for 2014-15. The college welcomed 237 new students, an increase of 10 percent from last year. Total enrollment for the year is 428 students from 33 states and 12 countries. Kansas students make up 46 percent of the total student population while 43 percent of students come from other states and 11 percent are international.

Jeremy Delly ’16 (Port-Au-Prince, Haiti) and Oliver Wiseman ’16 (Prineville, Ore.) go head-to-head in an intense Rock, Paper, Scissors match during Mod Olympics Aug. 17.

AUTHOR BRINGS HUMAN RIGHTS MESSAGE

New York Times bestselling author Blaine Harden, author of the campus read Escape from Camp 14, spoke on campus Oct. 16 about his work as a writer and human rights advocate. Harden’s book tells the story of one man’s experience in and escape from a North Korean political prison camp, and is leading First-year Experience with the theme “Power of Choice: Changing Cultures of Oppression.”

THEATRE PRODUCTION IS COMMUNITY EFFORT

The theatre program presented the American classic Our Town by Thornton Wilder, Oct. 30 to Nov. 2. Set in turn-of-the-century New England, the play is a celebration of small town American life and family values.

“The message of the importance of family and community bonds is relevant to our increasingly fragmented lives,” said director Laura Kraybill. “Our production was an opportunity to broaden our own sense of community as actors from across the city and campus worked together.”

The cast included President Howard Keim ’72 as the Stage Manager, who introduces and narrates the action of the play, as well as students, faculty, staff and community members.
CAMPAIGN FUNDRAISING COMPLETE

In early October, the college received the commitment to reach the $3.8 million goal for the construction of the north campus entrance and renovation of Northlawn performing arts building. The renovation is set to begin in late December and be completed by August 2015, prior to the start of the 2015-16 academic year. A total of 232 donors gave to the campaign project. “We are so grateful for the generosity of so many people that made reaching this goal a full three months in advance possible,” said Tonya (Hunsberger) ’94 Detweiler, interim vice president of Advancement.

ALUMNA JOINS DEVELOPMENT STAFF

Maxine Martin ’69 joined the Advancement team as a development officer for the western United States in October. She replaces Derek Yoder ’96, who served the territory for two years. She will work from her home in Lakewood, Colo.

Martin earned a B.S. in gerontology/community health from the University of Oregon (Eugene). She worked in the gerontology field for about 10 years and in medical sales and marketing for 22 years.

“I’m very excited to be working at Hesston College,” Martin said. “I see it as a new adventure. I love making new friends, and I’m looking forward to assisting Hesston College in raising funds for student scholarships and future capital projects.”
Hesston College received a $1 million gift in support of student scholarships and a future capital campaign project from longtime supporters Doug ’62 and Connie Dorsing of Fruitland, Idaho.

The Dorsings have designated $250,000 for an endowed scholarship fund. Hesston College will not use any part of the gift for annual operating expenses, rather, administrators are in conversation with the Dorsings for a specific designation for the remaining amount to be used in a way that benefits Hesston College and its students for the long term.

The gift is one of the largest in Hesston College’s history. Another $1 million gift was made for the construction of Kropf Center which was completed in 1991.

“We are incredibly grateful for the relationship Doug and Connie have maintained with Hesston College over the years and for this generous gift,” said President Howard Keim. “This is truly a transformative gift that will make a difference for students, facilities, faculty and staff. We will work with the Dorsings to discern the best use for their generosity to maximize the far reaching effects the gift will have.”

Doug serves as president and head of sales of Dorsing Seeds of Parma, Idaho, a worldwide producer and processor of vegetable seeds. Connie is a member of the pastoral staff of Evergreen Heights Mennonite Church, Caldwell, Idaho, and an active volunteer in the community.
LABYRINTH DEDICATED AS SACRED SPACE

EMILY KAUFFMAN '16

The campus and local communities have a new place to go for quiet contemplation or prayer with the completion of Hesston College’s prayer labyrinth.

Candles lit the path as the labyrinth was dedicated Oct. 30. Bible and ministry faculty member Michele (Schrock) ’81 Hershberger led participants through the labyrinth in prayer while guitar and mandolin music set the mood.

Prayer labyrinths offer a way of praying that brings a person’s whole body into the prayer. Individuals walk toward the center of the labyrinth and back out – a physical action that serves as a reminder of the spiritual action they are taking.

“Our physical bodies and spiritual beings are interconnected,” said exercise science faculty member Clay Stauffer ’99. “The labyrinth, with its walking and praying, activates this interconnectedness.”

The idea for a prayer labyrinth on campus started in 2002 when former physical education instructor Jen (Friesen) '84 LeFevre returned from a sabbatical where she experienced a prayer labyrinth and thought it would fit well here. By chance, at a meeting of Hesston College Partners, LeFevre was approached and given a donation that became seed money to build a labyrinth. Over the years, LeFevre and students in the Recreational Leadership class also channeled proceeds from the annual class-organized Thanksgiving Weekend Howard Hustle Two-mile Run/Walk for the project.

As funds were raised, a committee of faculty and staff including Hershberger, LeFevre, Stauffer, Physical Education Instructor and Women’s Soccer Coach Bryan Kehr, Campus Facilities Director Jim Mason ’75 and Psychology Instructor Kevin Wilder was formed to manage the project.

Materials were purchased in 2013, and the location behind Northlawn was selected in early 2014. First-year Experience students and the women’s soccer team built the labyrinth under the supervision of Miller Construction (Newton) during the FYE Service Week in September.

The committee chose a variation of the Santa Rosa labyrinth design, which is a seven-circuit labyrinth divided into four quadrants including a unique space called the “heart space,” which is an area not walked but serving as a sacred vessel for holding symbols of an individual’s issues, needs or celebrations.

“We hope that this labyrinth will be a sacred space to be used for prayer by the college community and the larger Hesston community,” said Kehr.
VOLLEYBALL DEMONSTRATES COMPETITIVE SPIRIT

The Hesston College volleyball team battled many challenging teams this season under the guidance of fourth-year coach Jessica Cleveland ’06, and came away with a strong winning record of 21-8. Cleveland assembled a talented and athletic roster for the 2014 season that proved it could compete with the region’s best teams, some of whom were ranked nationally. A loss at seventh ranked Cowley County Community College (Arkansas City, Kan.) brought an end to an 11-match win streak, the longest since an 11-match win streak in 2006. The Larks’ season came to an end Nov. 8 with a loss to Fort Scott (Kan.) Community College in the regional tournament.

MEN’S CROSS COUNTRY HAS CONSISTENT SEASON

The men’s cross country team competed consistently during the 2014 season. Muoch Keak ’16 (Lincoln, Neb.) and Ryan Dungan ’15 (Wichita, Kan.) were the top Lark finishers at every meet, and both competed at nationals Nov. 8 in Lubbock, Texas. Out of 256 runners, Keak finished 113th and Dungan finished 134th. Nine Lark runners represented the men’s team during the season.

WOMEN’S SOCCER RELIED ON SOPHOMORES FOR LEADERSHIP

The women’s soccer team looked to a strong group of sophomores for leadership during the season, and the challenge was enthusiastically accepted. Megan Baumgartner ’15 (Hesston, Kan.), Dusti Diener ’15 (Harrisonville, Mo.), Cadie Kiger ’15 (Jeffersonville, Ind.) and Rachel Short-Miller ’15 (Bellingham, Wash.) were often instrumental in Larks victories, while Skylar Tripp ’15 (Craig, Colo.) provided solid protection in the goal. The Larks ended their season Nov. 1 in the first round of playoffs against Hutchinson (Kan.) Community College. They finished with a 4-10-3 record.
STUDENTS SAY

HOUS HAVE YOUR COLLEGE EXPERIENCES AND CLASSES TRANSFORMED YOUR WORLDVIEW?

Jenna VonBargen ’16, Baldwin City, Kan.
“Already my college experience has changed my perspective on the world because I have been exposed to so many different kinds of people. I have been fortunate to interact with students from all over the world, all walks of life and different faith traditions. Each student has different backgrounds, experiences and opinions to bring to the table. It is incredible how eye-opening it can be to simply be exposed to people who know and believe things that I hadn’t even really considered before.”

Andry Stutzman ’16, Harrisonburg, Va.
“I think that anyone who attends Hesston for a significant amount of time will quickly see that just because the college adheres to the Mennonite faith statement doesn’t mean that there aren’t a wide variety of views and backgrounds represented on campus. Through CAB activities and talking to people in classes and on campus, I have encountered people who have challenged me not to immediately dismiss others’ views, but instead consider the way my own views have been shaped by my life experiences and, ultimately, understand how these experiences have given me a unique worldview that might differ from others.”

HOW HAVE YOU EXPERIENCED MULTICULTURALISM AND DIVERSITY AT HESSTON COLLEGE?

Natsuki Mizutani ’16, Mie, Japan
“As an international student, I am sometimes surprised by Americans or other international students’ ideas and behaviors, but being exposed to others’ ways of thinking and customs has helped me experience multiculturalism and diversity.”

Austin Mitchell ’16, Plano, Texas
“I have experienced multiculturalism and diversity simply through meeting people on campus and making new friends. I have also attended the campus group Nations Mixer, which gives students the opportunity to interact with one another and learn about each other’s countries and cultures.”

WHAT IS IT LIKE ATTENDING COLLEGE WITH STUDENTS FROM ALL ACROSS THE COUNTRY AND WORLD AND FROM A VARIETY OF BACKGROUNDS?

Ty Gwess ’16, Wichita, Kan.
“It gives me a good opportunity to learn about places that I wouldn’t have had the ability to learn about at a lot of other colleges.”

Sarah Anyar ’16, Towson, Md.
“It’s amazing that I am attending school with students from around the country and the world because it gives me a good sense of other cultures.”

Nate Gingerich ’15, Goshen, Ind.
“I love being part of such a diverse campus because I am able to interact and learn about other students who come from very different backgrounds than my own, while strengthening my understanding of my own culture and identity.”

the buzz floating around about Hesston College football, Maybe you’ve even read the mail and know that THIS IS THE YEAR…just not for Hesston College Football.

COACH’S TIMEOUT!!!

Just to be clear, Hesston College is NOT getting a football team – we’re not even talking about it. All that football stuff is just to get folks talking about the 2014 Phonathon.

As part of the Phonathon effort to help raise funds for student scholarships, the college needs 2,500 alumni and friends to give $42 or more so we can reach our goal of $100,000.

Every household that gives as part of this campaign will receive a collectible Hesston College football magnet. In addition, those who make contributions of $42 or more will be entered in a drawing for a chance to win the first official Hesston College Football jersey.

PHONING IS UNDERWAY

through November. A hardworking and passionate group of students are making phone calls to alumni and friends all across the country to spread the word about the ways Hesston College is influencing their lives, and to raise money so other students can have the Hesston Experience.

If you’ve already received your call and sent your contribution – THANK YOU! Every gift makes a difference for students. If you haven’t heard from us yet, pick up the phone when we call! The students are having a great time visiting with alumni and friends, swapping stories and making connections.
