A CULTURE OF SERVICE

Friends,

The Hesston Experience is a defining piece of Hesston College. As I reflect on the many layers that create this one-of-a-kind experience for our campus, I’m drawn to the acts of service generously offered through the lives of our faculty and staff, students, alumni and friends.

As our vision statement explains so clearly, Hesston College graduates change the world as they serve through their vocations, churches, families and individual commitments to follow Christ. I am so grateful to see our vision be a living testament of who we are as a campus community.

Even before graduation, a heart for service is growing in our students on campus. For example, this is evident in many areas including our nursing and theatre programs. Through the Population-Based Nursing course, students have the opportunity to not only see where other population groups are coming from, but they get to spend time with them, gain a deeper understanding of their situations and offer solutions to help improve their lives. The theatre department is also expanding their capacity for empathy, using their performance skills to raise awareness of injustice in our society and giving back to those in need in our area.

I believe this stirring in our students is due to our incredible faculty and staff laying the foundation for a service mind-set. One group that does this exceptionally well is our campus facilities team. While they prefer to humbly offer their services in the background of our campus hustle and bustle, they lead by example through their joyful service to our students and the entire campus community.

It’s no wonder that as our graduates leave campus and start new chapters in their lives, this desire to serve stays with them. Sometimes we see it through alumni giving of their resources to ensure incoming students have the same opportunities to experience Hesston the way they did. Other times we see it through alumni who give up the comforts of home to step into a new culture and way of living to be the hands and feet of Jesus.

These acts of service are a key component to the Hesston Experience and a great example of why the world needs Hesston College. Your kindness to others is changing our world for the better.

Peace to you,

Dr. Joseph A. Manickam ’87
President

The year was 1982. Yost Center was under construction, and a crane dominated the campus landscape. One morning, the campus family was greeted by a bra waving happily in the breeze from the top of the crane.

The year was 1975. Graduation was going to happen on the lawn that morning. But first, all the chairs that were resting on top of Northlawn (now known as Keim Center) needed to be relocated to the lawn where they had been the night before. Jim Mason ’75 admits to participating in that prank. Mason became director of facilities 27 years later.

And then there were the leaves. Some guys took it upon themselves to fill a Kauffman Court mod completely with leaves – the whole entire hallway, all the way to the ceiling. They had collected bags of leaves from people in town. What went in had to come out, and it was up to the facilities crew to tackle the job – a job that needed to be done quickly because guys couldn’t get in or out of their mod, and the leaves were full of insects. So even after it was cleared out, which took several hours, the whole mod had to be fumigated because it was crawling with bugs. To make matters worse, there was an event on campus, and one of the facilities guys had to cancel a personal engagement to help clean up.

While many campus pranksters were able to keep their cover, the instigator of this leafy, bug-filled fiasco wasn’t so lucky. It just so happened that a pastoral ministries (PM) student and his wife lived in a college rental house near campus and had recently raked their yard, accumulating about 25 bags of leaves. One of the pranksters came through the lunch line, where the PM student’s wife worked, with then resident director Brent “Dogg” Brockmueller ’01 next in line. The wife of the PM student recognized the student and innocently said, “I hope you found good use for those leaves you borrowed from us. Did they work out for what you wanted them for?”

Busted.

Hesston College. Pranks happen.
“Students think they’re adults but they’ve got a ways to go,” said Jim Mason, recently retired director of facilities. “And so I still find a lot of joy just watching students become young adults. Sometimes it can really be frustrating for us because there’s stuff we have to fix and clean up after that happened because they didn’t make the best choices. But I think for the college, our big challenge is to engage with the different kinds of students in their backgrounds. Getting them to be more involved in what’s going on here, and helping them see they can still be a leader in a small pond – that’s what we are about at Hesston College.”

“We really don’t know what’s going to happen every day,” Mason added. “Students are sort of unpredictable and at an age where they are planning things without regard to planning ahead. And so we deal with that.”

Serving the campus community – it’s what they do. The facilities staff work with...well, everything and everyone, including building and vehicle maintenance among so much more. Energy management, electrical systems. Light bulbs, lawns, leaves. Toilets, trees. Floors, flowers, faculty. Drainage, doors. Students, staff, sustainability. Pipes, pickups, pancakes.

Wait. Pancakes?

“We started our pancake feed in ’96 on Valentine’s Day,” said Hiebert. “One of the guys [Lyle Bitikofer] at that time had the idea. We even put up crepe paper and decorated the shop and did some fun things. We’ve done it every year since except for COVID. The first year we did just pancake mix out of the box, and that was gross. One of our team members [Naomi Unruh] had been a missionary in Africa, and they made their own pancake mix and she made homemade maple syrup. We still use those recipes today. It’s a lot of fun and a way to interact with all employees on campus.”

Homemade pancakes and maple syrup are a tiny drop in the bucket of creative solutions this crew feeds the college campus. For example, the conveyer belt in the dining hall. It was old and kept breaking down. It involved a motor and canvas that was covered in food waste and couldn’t be washed clean. When food service staff complained about the vintage belt, Marlo Duerksen ’77, facilities specialist at the time, bought a piece of white hard plastic – hard enough and slick enough to skate on – and he cut it and set it in place. Perfect. No motor that breaks. Just a super sanitary place for trays.

Providing good service to a campus community involves responding to needs, but it also involves being proactive.

“Years ago, we used to have problems with frozen pipes,” retired buildings and grounds manager Tim Goering ’76 recalled. “Well, if you get a call that a pipe has frozen and broke, and you go and you fix that, and just walk away from it and didn’t do anything else, in my opinion, you didn’t do your job. You find why it broke, and then you dig in further and you find a solution to keep it from happening again. And I will say that through this last cold snap this winter, we didn’t have one pipe that broke on our campus. We had done our preventive work. And that includes the fact that we’re involved from the very beginning with new buildings so we can give our input. We’re on the construction site every day, and if we see something that is going to cause a problem later on, we try to get it corrected then. That has been so helpful for us, and I credit college leadership for that.”

The facilities team members have assignments and specialize in certain areas, but they also cross over and work together. Their ongoing collaboration is how this department saying came to be: Miracles we can make happen, the impossible just takes longer. When it snows, everyone helps move snow. When there’s a big problem, they are all pitching in on the solution. When there is an emergency, a large event on campus or multiple events and activities on the same day, the entire team pulls together to make it happen.

“If you’re just here to do your job, you’re missing out on a lot,” Goering said. “Working here has provided us with opportunities of service as well.”

With many great volunteers over the years coming through the facilities department, staff have tried to serve these volunteers by treating them to lunch, having them over for supper and doing other activities together off campus.

“We learned from the volunteers who served us, how to work with them and to grow from that experience of service, and then to turn around and help others,” explained Hiebert.

And honestly, there might be a call to pranking, even among the facilities team. When Goering was gone for several days during his tenure, he returned to find the driver’s seat on his van had been replaced by a toilet. Another time, Goering walked into the shop to find Duerksen working underneath his van, installing some sort of bright red contraption. When Goering inquired about what was going on, Duerksen muttered something about “Some emission thing” and Goering walked on. Later, when Goering drove his van, he discovered much to his chagrin that every time he put the brakes on, a very loud fire alarm horn “emitted” from his van.

Yes, for the Hesston College facilities team, pranks happen. And so does a lot of creative problem solving, collaboration, just plain hard work and service with a smile. It’s what they do.

Generosity spurs new scholarship opportunities

Through the generosity of our supporters, Hesston College was able to offer five new institutional endowed scholarships to students with specific interests, qualifications or financial need. With 99 percent of Hesston College students receiving institutional aid of some sort, these additional scholarships help bring our students one step closer to reaching their educational goals. Take a look at these new scholarship opportunities:

- RD Snyder Life Sciences Scholarship
- Janice R. Brubacher Nursing Scholarship
- Sherwyn J. Smeltzer Business Management Scholarship
- Doris and Harold Hjelmstad Scholarship
- Ventura Family Scholarship

There’s no question these scholarships are making a lasting impression on students. Just ask Bryce Blake ’24, a freshman in the Bible and Ministry program, a member of the men’s basketball team and a recipient of the DewEze Bible and Ministry Scholarship. As a native of Jefferson, Ga., Blake found the idea of going to college so far away from home quite daunting. In a letter expressing his gratitude for the college’s support he writes, “When I arrived I wasn’t excited, yet thankful to be blessed and fortunate enough to make it to a wonderful school like this.” Blake continues, “The next day after I moved in, I felt a homey sense of comfort, even though far from home.”

Blake concluded his letter writing, “I will try my best to learn a lot, to play well and to exhibit Christ-like behavior through my words and actions! May God bless y’all!”

Another grateful scholarship recipient is Larry Ruffin ’24, a freshman in the Bible and Ministry program. He is also a member of the men’s basketball team and involved in instrumental music playing the grand piano. Ruffin was a recipient of the Alvin and Gertrude Blough scholarship as well. He expressed his gratitude for the support in a letter, writing, “I am beyond excited to see what plans God has for me at Hesston College.” Ruffin wrapped up his letter by saying, “The fact that all of my interests are here at Hesston reinforces my belief that God has put me here for a reason, and I am grateful that your scholarship will help me find out what that reason is.”
A desire to serve the campus community is a compelling driver for many alumni who make the choice to become donors. It’s because of their generous contributions that the college can offer a transformative experience and monetary support through competitive financial aid.

While giving doesn’t look the same for everyone, all of it carries an impact.

Meet the Tyarts – GEM (Giving Every Month) donors

Merily (Mosquera) ’00 and Andy Tyart are firm believers in giving back. As someone who did not have the financial means to attend Hesston College on her own, Merily is still grateful for the generosity of previous donors that allowed her to get her nursing degree.

Not long after graduating from Hesston College, Merily was able to visit campus and talk to nursing classes about her experience in oncology. “That was really, for me, an amazing and very rewarding way of being able to also give back,” she explains.

While she thought she would continue to give back in this way, she later discovered God had a different plan. Now that she lives on the east coast with her husband and their two children, the desire to give back hasn’t changed…it just looks different.

“I may not be able to be there, but [by giving], you’re empowering people who are gonna go throughout nationally and internationally to communities where they will bring that experience, and they will bring that service and they will make a difference,” says Merily.

Having experienced the kindness and help of others first hand, the Tyarts are eager to share the same loving generosity with others and now give back as GEM donors. Merily says, “I want to be able to be an agent of empowerment and change in somebody else’s life, who may otherwise not have the opportunity.”
Meet the Oyers – Partner donors

Recent graduates Jared ’19 and Jenna (Boller) ’20 Oyer have fond memories of their time at Hesston and shortly after graduating, felt a strong desire to give back to the community that had given them so much.

Jenna completed the four-year nursing BSN program and played soccer her first two years at Hesston, while Jared received an associate degree in general studies and was a member of Bel Canto Singers before completing his bachelor’s degree at Eastern Mennonite University. To top off these great academic and co-curricular experiences, Hesston College is where Jared and Jenna first met.

“Jenna smiled as she reflected on her time at Hesston College. “Hesston was more than just a school for me. It was a community that welcomed me with open arms and helped me grow both academically and personally,” she said.

Having received so much from Hesston College, they began their giving journey as GEMs not too long after graduating, donating $25 a month. They say sticking to a budget with a portion specified for charitable giving made this an easy first step. They later met with a member of the advancement team at Hesston who shared the college’s vision for the future and the changes that had taken place since the couple graduated. This glimpse of the future got them excited about contributing more, so they increased their giving and became Partners.

Giving at the Partner level is a big commitment not typical of recent graduates who may still have things like student debt in the back of their minds, but Jenna and Jared don’t see it that way. “I think if people could see that it’s not as daunting of an amount as it sounds, if you’re just doing it every month…even $25 a month can still make a difference if many people are a part of that,” Jenna explained. The Oyers’ generosity is a testament to the impact Hesston College had on their lives. Their giving helps ensure future students will have access to the same, and even better opportunities and experiences than they had.

“Hesston has been a part of my family for generations, and I’m proud to continue that legacy by supporting the college as a donor,” Jared added. “I want to give back to the place that gave me so many amazing experiences and lifelong friends.”

A home off the grid. The electricity comes from solar panels. There’s a deep freezer, but no refrigerator. There’s a propane stove, but no other appliances. Rain water is caught and stored in tanks for all cooking, cleaning and showering - when the dry season comes, less is done to conserve water. Laundry is hand washed. All cooking is from scratch. There’s a small town 30 minutes away to get basic food items, but other supplies are five hours away. Plus, the main mode of transportation is on foot or by motorcycle – not ideal for a family of four.

Despite these circumstances, “It’s paradise,” says Emma (Payne) ’14 Redding. “I’m looking at this amazing view right now from our house…the weather is perfect. We have a great team. We get to live here - we don’t have to live here - God has brought us here.” “Here” is a small village in Peru where Emma, a graduate of Hesston’s three-year nursing program, and her husband Jared are serving as missionaries with their sons Micah and Jack, ages 3 and 1.

A HEART FOR THE MISSION FIELD

It was her sophomore year at Hesston College when God started pulling on Emma’s heart strings for the unreached, and she soon began pursuing missions.

After connecting with a woman from her hometown in Iowa, Emma was able to go on her first mission trip to Nigeria in the summer of 2013. “During my time there, God just confirmed to me in a big way that yes, this is what I’m asking you to do with your life,” Emma recalls. “And I loved it. I had such a peace and a joy about it.”

While her heart was still on the mission field, Emma pushed through and completed her last year at Hesston College, and went on to receive her bachelor’s through an online program.

“I just wanted to just go and start [in missions], but I knew that finishing nursing would be beneficial,” she explains. “I could use that skill and that degree later on, on the mission field.”

Just a few weeks after returning from Nigeria, Emma met Jared. And while she was determined to not let anyone keep her from the mission field, their relationship blossomed. They married and decided to pursue what was originally just Emma’s calling, together.

As newlyweds, the Reddings connected with Pioneers, an organization that partners with local churches to equip and send missionaries to unreached peoples. After much prayer and careful consideration of where to go, the couple landed with the launch team in Peru in 2019. This offered a gentle immersion into the Spanish language and culture before starting ministry.

SERVING THE ASHÉNINKA PEOPLE

The Reddings and their mission team of seven have since been working to plant seeds in hopes of building a self-sustaining church, one where Ashéninka believers will be the ones going to surrounding areas to share the gospel of Christ.

“We don’t want this to be a missionary led church. We want this to be an Ashéninka church led by Ashéninka believers,”
Emma emphasizes. “We want to disciple and empower and equip the believers here to go out and do that because it will be much better received from an Ashéninka than from our mouth.”

Emma admits they may not see the fruit of their work, but did recall how one missionary explained it to her, “he said, ‘we weren’t even planting seeds. We were just moving rocks.’ And some days, it feels like all we do is move rocks... But it’s not our work, it’s God’s work.”

The Reddings are now spending most of their time learning the Ashéninka language. Most villagers speak Spanish also, so they can communicate, but Ashéninka is their heart language.

“If you and I want to learn something really important, or want to understand something the best, we want to learn it in English. And so we want to do that for them in Ashéninka,” Emma explains. “We don’t want there to be any muddied waters in the gospel presentation because of language barriers.”

The mission Emma and Jared are on may seem like a tough one, but good times are still plenty.

“One of the biggest sources of joy for me here is our time during the women’s Bible studies every week,” says Emma. “We have this audio Bible in their language that we can play scripture from, especially for people like this woman who doesn’t speak any Spanish. And so, watching her face as she hears some of this scripture for the very first time and hearing her questions, too - it is priceless. I mean, it’s why we’re here.”

“My hope and my prayer is that there will be Ashéninka in heaven because of the work here,” Emma shares. And while she admits they have given up a lot in a tangible way, it can’t compare to the salvation of the Ashéninka people. “Them knowing Christ as their Savior and one day them being in heaven worshiping God with you - not that it makes the rest of it easy, because it’s not - but it is worth it.”

Emma and Jared believe they still have a very clear calling to remain in this place to serve the Ashéninka people. “It’s really hard some days. We miss our family,” Emma says. “But in this season, this is what he’s asking of us. And so we just try and be obedient to that.”

“Don't want this to be a missionary led church. We want this to be an Asháninka church led by Asháninka believers. We want to disciple and empower and equip the believers...”
A Kansas native and graduate of Elyria Christian School, Abby Ediger '23, was used to a small school where you can get to know everyone, an attribute that resonated with her on the Hesston campus.

“I have never loved the idea of a big college, where no one really knows each other,” Ediger explains. “Hesston College gave me the opportunity to get to know a lot of people on campus.”

Her studies have led her to talk to more than just those on campus. Eager to put her educational skills in emergency management services to work, Ediger began volunteering with Hesston EMS in the fall of 2021 and started engaging with the broader community she serves.

“I have always loved helping people, and EMS applies to that,” she says. “I get to help other people in their most vulnerable state.”

Ediger reveals another personal perk to this type of service, “I also have always loved adrenaline rushes, and EMS for sure gives me that adrenaline rush.”

She passed the EMT certification in July 2022, and continues to serve as a first responder with Hesston EMS in coordination with her education at Hesston College.

“Looking ahead, Ediger says she is exploring her options, “I am deciding between moving on and pursuing my paramedic certification, or working towards an ultrasound tech certification or taking a gap year and getting more experience as an EMT.”
On October 24, 2022, Hesston College celebrated two new emeritus faculty members. With over 74 years between them, Vickie Andres, business professor, and Margaret Wiebe, library director, were honored for their years of dedication and commitment to the college and students.

Andres served in the business department for 33 years as professor, mentor and business advocate. Through her years at the college Andres ushered in relationships with local businesses that brought internships, jobs and financial support. Her vision for a future business program was the beginning of the School of Management Hesston College has today. “Vickie helped to put together the entire program,” said Vice President of Academics Dr. Carren Moham. “A lot of it would not have happened if it hadn’t been for Vickie’s input.”

Heidi Hochstetler ’00, intensive English language program and education professor, spoke about her experience with Andres. “Vickie is like an aspen grove,” said Hochstetler, “on the surface they look like individual trees, but once you look below the surface, all of the roots are interconnected.”

The current home of Mary Miller Library at Hesston College is the result of Wiebe’s work and vision. Beginning her career at the college in 1981, Wiebe brought forth the remodel and renovation of the campus library that has served generations of students, as well as the community.

In the span of 40 years, the way information is delivered has seen extensive change. Wiebe navigated these changes and was able to deliver new methods of data as they were available. “The library at the beginning of her career and today is a really different place,” said chemistry professor Will Wiebe-Friesen, “and we can thank her flexibility, creativity and adapting to those changes for the many resources we all have available to us now.”

Emeritus status is granted to selected faculty and staff who have served the college for 15 or more years and have retired. By being granted this honor, Andres and Wiebe will be given the rights and privileges of current faculty. They were each presented with a plaque honoring their service and this day of celebration.

Thailand Trip

Hesston College School of Management students and faculty traveled to Thailand and were joined by President Manickam.
Best season in the books
The men’s soccer team wrapped up the year with their most successful season in 26 years, finishing with a record of 8-7-1. A true melting of backgrounds, the team was formed by student athletes from Albania, France, Germany, Japan, South Africa and seven U.S. states.

Head coach Dante Texeira had nothing but praise for his team. “The dedication and hard work from all the boys was amazing this season. Multiple guys stepped up and took over roles and positions that they haven’t been put in before, and in the end, it paid off with us breaking a 26-year curse,” Texeira said. “I couldn’t be more proud of all of the guys in the program that helped us to get to this point. Now we’ll look to build off of it.”

Inaugural Women’s Flag Football Season
Hesston College’s flag football team took the field for the first time March 10 in a round robin tournament where they dominated two of their first three opponents on their home field.

The players represent seven states and several multi-sport athletes including three basketball players, one soccer and basketball player, one soccer only player and one volleyball player.

“I am truly blessed to help grow the women’s flag football program here at Hesston College,” says head coach Max Switzer. “To be able to be the first head coach and lay down the foundation here is an honor. The women have been working extremely hard throughout the fall and the beginning of this spring getting prepared for the inaugural season. We are excited to see the hard work pay off as we prepare to play in the national tournament in Atlanta, Ga., in the middle of May.”

Practice field added
Thanks to generous donors, a new practice field was added west of Oswald baseball field. Made available to teams in April, this grass field measuring 100 by 55 yards offers many benefits. Different teams can now practice at the same time, student athletes’ practice schedules are more consistent and overuse of game fields is alleviated.

Sports to utilize the field include flag football, men’s and women’s soccer and track and field.

Disc golf teams make it to nationals
Great performances at the regional championships in March earned both the men’s and women’s disc golf teams a bid to the national championship in North Carolina.

The men’s four-player team competed at the Division I level and ousted several big competitors, finishing 24th overall out of 64 teams.

The women’s two-player team also represented Hesston College well in their division.
Theatre students expand capacity for empathy through service by Rachel Jantzi

Theatre provides more than entertainment, it’s a mirror of our world and we wish that reflection to look a little kinder as Hesston College Theatre works to serve our campus and beyond.

Safehope of Harvey County, an outreach agency for those who have experienced sexual violence, requested an original piece on abuse and trauma that was researched, written and performed by students on and off campus for various audiences.

Students have taken the show “I Never Saw Another Butterfly” into high schools and led powerful talkbacks on the children of the Holocaust.

Inspired by a boxer-cladded character in last fall’s production, the theatre department accepted donations of new undergarments and socks. This large donation was delivered by students to a shelter they researched prior to going and then toured upon arrival.

Ongoing service projects include Theatre for Young Audiences which offers family friendly messages, a local playwriting competition that has given a voice to our community as they write their stories, see them performed and participate in a talkback session afterward and a summer theatre camp experience for middle and high schoolers that puts a show together in a wildly collaborative whirlwind of a week.

COLLEGE COMMITS TO ENACTING ALL RECOMMENDATIONS FROM EXTERNAL TITLE IX REVIEW

An external review commissioned by President Joseph A. Manickam of Hesston College’s efforts to prevent and address sexual and gender-based harassment and violence and meet its obligations to Title IX found significant gaps and failures, Manickam and Board Chair Ken G Kabira announced April 14. In a letter to the community, Manickam and Kabira apologized on behalf of the college and committed to fully enacting the review’s recommendations to strengthen and improve student safety and wellbeing.

“We want to share with you, as two people who love Hesston College and believe in its mission, that we found reading this report and its descriptions of how we have failed our students painful, humbling and saddening,” Manickam and Kabira wrote. “To our students who were impacted by the college’s failures, we extend our own and the college’s most sincere apologies. We commit to doing all that we can to earn back your trust in the college.”

In November 2022, the college asked Cozen O’Conor, a firm with nationally recognized expertise in investigating sexual and gender-based harassment and violence, to conduct the review in response to student concerns.

In their letter to the community, Manickam and Kabira announced that the college would immediately:

• Work with Cozen O’Connor to initiate prompt restorative outreach to those affected by the college’s insufficient actions in response to their reports;

• Provide educational and professional development programming for all senior leaders to ensure they have the necessary expertise in Title IX and related matters;

• Ensure that all campus administrators, faculty and staff who are or may be involved in the response to a report have sufficient training and support to ensure that these types of failures cannot occur at Hesston again;

• Immediately initiate a search for an external partner firm with expertise in Title IX institutional change to help prioritize the Cozen O’Connor recommendations, build a plan of action and track our implementation to ensure it is prompt, effective and meaningful;

• With the above partner, as a means of public accountability, keep the Hesston College community regularly informed on our Title IX efforts and provide opportunities to gather related feedback; and

• Identify and designate additional funding to support these efforts.

Manickam will update the community regularly on next steps and intends to have key improvements in place this fall. The college has created a webpage, hesston.edu/tixreview, that includes Cozen O’Connor’s full report as well as related resources.

Students, faculty, staff and alumni are encouraged to submit questions, comments and feedback to questions@hesston.edu.

Give back to our facilities team

Our facilities team is in major need of vehicle updates. The newest vehicle in the fleet is nearly 25 years old! Facilities is the backbone of our campus, serving us with aging trucks, vans and even an old Ford loader tractor from the 1960s. If you have a vehicle you would like to donate or leave as a legacy gift to Hesston College, our facilities team would be extremely grateful.
